CARE OF YOUR AFRICAN VIOLET

LIGHT - Place your violets where they get good light at all times but not much direct sunlight in the summer months. In winter when the sunlight is not as strong they will need more. When healthy plants have light, yellowish foliage they are probably getting too much sun. Very dark green foliage and lack of flowers means they are not getting enough light.

WATERING - NEVER use cold water. Use water that is lukewarm or at least as warm as room temperature. If you water from the bottom be careful to remove the plant from the water when the soil shows moist on top. If left too long in water the soil gets soggy and roots will be damaged. Part of the time at least they should be watered from the top because they should have some leaching of the soil to remove excess soluble salts. The plants need to have the foliage sprayed occasionally with lukewarm water and it does not spot the foliage if no sun hits the foliage until the plant is thoroughly dried off.

TEMPERATURE - The average house temperature of 70 - 72 degrees is very satisfactory but they will do good anywhere between 60 to 80 degrees but they like the temperature to be as even as possible. Sudden changes of temperature or strong drafts of air will cause the flowers to drop. In cold weather keep plants away from unprotected windows at night or when temperature could go below 60 degrees.

HUMIDITY - Many times the humidity in the home is too low for Violets to bloom well and to increase it place the plants on a saucer or tray of pebbles, sand or chicken grit and keep water in tray but not enough so that the pot is in the water. Humidity is often higher in the kitchen than in other rooms.

SOIL - African Violets need a light well drained soil. A good soil mixture may be made up of light garden soil, sand, leaf-mold, peat and rotted manure. This should be sterilized.

FERTILIZERS - The plants should have a feed about every two weeks of any good complete fertilizer, following the directions on the package.

WHEN YOUR PLANTS FAIL TO BLOOM - It may be that they have been shifted into a pot that is a little too large and it will take a little time for roots to develop but usually they need more light than you are giving them, regular feeds of fertilizer, less water letting them get a little dry between waterings and when the plant gets too full of leaves or crowns they should be thinned out by removing some of the outside crowns or repotting, or just thinning out some of the leaves.

PROPAGATING - In propagating violets from leaves use a sharp knife or razor blade and cut off the leaf stem leaving about one inch of the stem and place in vermiculite or sterilized sand up to the leaf and keep moist until small plants come and are large enough to pot up in small pots. Single crown plants usually look better and bloom better than plants with more than one crown.
